A doctoral candidate in Ohio State University's Russian and East European History program, Victoria Clement conducted research in Turkmenistan and Moscow, Russia from September 2001-April 2003 with grants from the International Research and Exchanges Board (IREX) and American Councils for International Education (ACTR/ACCELS). Her dissertation, "Power and Symbols: Language and Education among Turkmen 1879 to the present", examines the classroom as a site for transmission of culture and the role of culture in defining a society. Ms. Clement's research examines the power of alphabets and language content in the Turkmen community's transition from nineteenth century cultural and political independence, through Russian Imperialism, membership in the Soviet Union, and independence in 1991.
